

I have been concerned about the consolidation of the media for years. It surfaced dramatically (and disastrously I believe) at the time of the last presidential election and its aftermath. A diverse, balanced and competitive media is essential to our democratic form of government and to the confidence of citizens in the fair workings of that government. It is critical that the congress help restore this basic right by voting against the FCC rule change on June 2.